

DEMO SAMPLE: Competitor snapshot

Portfolio sample. Not client work. The "client" (Hearthloop) is a fictional startup made up by Edgex. The competitors below are real companies, and every fact about them is from public pages found by web search on 2026-09-25, linked next to each claim. Prices change often; treat them as a snapshot on that date. Written with AI assistance and reviewed before publishing.

Brief (invented for the demo): Hearthloop wants to sell refill-at-home cleaning products to renters in small apartments in the US. Question: who already sells refills by mail, at what price, and where is the gap?

This is the Basic tier format (3-5 competitors, one table, short takeaways). Standard and Premium add market sizing, customer-review themes, SWOT and positioning.

1. Summary

- The refill-by-mail space is established. At least four US brands sell reusable bottles plus refills online.
- They split into two models: dry tablets / sheets you dissolve in water (Blueland) and liquid concentrates or cartons (Branch Basics, Cleancult, Grove).
- Entry prices range from about $5 for a single bottle (Cleancult) to $75+ for a starter kit (Branch Basics).
- Gap for a new brand: none of the four lead on "small apartment" as the core promise (storage space, letterbox-size delivery). That angle is open, but it's a positioning gap, not a product gap.

2. Competitor table

Brand	Model	Entry price found	Refill price found	Source
Blueland	Tablets dissolved in water; "forever" bottles and tins	Starter sets sold per product (price not shown in results)	Dish and laundry tablets from $0.32/tablet; toilet from $1.16; hand soap $2.25/tablet	blueland.com bulk refill, The Common Mom
Branch Basics	One liquid concentrate, diluted into several bottles	Starter kits about $75 to $125	Concentrate 33.8 fl oz, $55 list	branchbasics.com starter kits, Green Design Center
Cleancult	Aluminum/glass bottles, refills in paper cartons, subscription	Bottles from $4.99	Cartons about $7.99 to $14.99; free shipping on 3+ cartons	cleancult.com , My Subscription Addiction
Grove Collaborative	Marketplace + own brand, concentrates and refills, VIP membership	VIP membership offer $14.99 first year (promo)	Per-product; not shown in results	grove.co refillable, grove.co concentrate

3. What each one is missing (the opening for Hearthloop)

- Blueland: tablets need a bottle per product, so a full kit still takes shelf space. Room to pitch "fewer bottles."
- Branch Basics: high entry price ($75+). Room for a cheaper starter.
- Cleancult: reviewers note cartons are still single-use packaging ([The Zero Waste List](https://www.thezero wastelist.com)).
- Grove: broad marketplace, not focused on one use case. A narrow "small apartment" brand can speak more directly.

4. Catch

Four established brands already own this search space. A newcomer needs a sharp angle and a low-cost way to reach renters. This snapshot doesn't size the market or test demand; the Standard tier would.

5. Method

Web search of each brand's own site and independent reviews on 2026-09-25. No paid databases. No surveys. Nothing here is a guess; where a number wasn't found, the table says so.